JOHN QUINCY ADAMS.

WASHINGTON, 28 February, 1829.

Mr. White, from the committee appointed to wait on the President of the United States and notify him that the Senate is assembled and ready to receive any communications that he may be pleased to make, reported that they had performed that duty, and that the President informed them that he would to-morrow make a communication to the Senate.

The following message from the President of the United States, received and considered the 3d instant in legislative session, was, at that time, on motion by Mr. Tazewell, ordered to be transferred, with the accompanying documents, to the Executive Journal:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

I herewith transmit a copy of the instructions prepared by the Secretary of State, and furnished to the ministers of the United States appointed to attend at the assembly of the American plenipotentiaries first held at Panama, and then transferred to Tacubaya. The occasion upon which they were given has passed away, and there is no present probability of the renewal of these negotiations; but the purposes for which they were intended are still of the deepest interest to our country, and to the world, and may hereafter call again for the active efforts and beneficent energies of the Government of the United States. The motives for withholding them from general publication having ceased, justice to the Government from which they emanated, and to the people for whose benefit it was instituted, require that they should be made known. With this view, and from the consideration that the subjects embraced by these iustructions must, probably, engage hereafter the deliberations of our successors, I deem it proper to make this communication to both houses of Congress. One copy only of the instructions being prepared, I send it to the Senate, requesting that it may be transmitted also to the House of Representatives.
